Homily

Twenty-Sixth Sunday in Ordinary Time
(World Day of Migrants and Refugees)

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ,
Human beings have often been called the crown of creation because we possess reason, intelligence, emotion, imagination, and the ability to understand. With these gifts, humanity has continually expanded the limits of space and time. Our hands may be short, but we created tools to extend their reach. We made knives, arrows, plows, and farming tools. Later, we built cars and airplanes that allow us to travel to the other side of the world. Through language, we expanded the reach of our voices. In the past, we could communicate only with people close enough to hear us. Today, through the internet, we can speak instantly with someone thousands of miles away. Through writing, we have even expanded time itself. Two thousand years later, we still read Plato, study Confucius, and encounter the wisdom and faith of ancient generations through Buddhist scriptures and the Bible. Through language, writing, and reason, humanity has created culture and civilization.

Today, humanity has created something new: artificial intelligence. AI can learn from enormous amounts of information and respond to our questions. I also sometimes ask AI when I am curious about something. Some people believe that one day AI may become so advanced that its abilities will be difficult for us even to comprehend. When artificial intelligence is placed inside a human like body, we call it a humanoid robot. Interestingly, humanoid robots are often designed to resemble the human body. Why? Because our houses, doors, stairs, chairs, automobiles, factories, and countless tools were all designed for human beings. If a robot is going to live and work in the human world, it is useful for that robot to resemble us.

This reminds me of the words from the Book of Genesis. When God created humanity, God said, “Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.” Human beings make humanoid robots in our own image so that they can function in our world. God, however, created us in his image so that we could live according to his love. To be made in the image of God does not mean that our physical appearance resembles God. It means that we are capable of loving, choosing freely, distinguishing good from evil, forgiving those who hurt us, and even sacrificing ourselves for others. Human dignity, therefore, does not depend upon wealth, education, nationality, race, immigration status, or social success. Our dignity comes from the simple and profound truth that every human being has been created in the image and likeness of God.

The ancient Chinese philosopher Mencius taught that four beginnings of goodness are planted within the human heart. He spoke of compassion for those who suffer, humility that allows us to yield to others, a sense of shame before what is wrong, and the wisdom to distinguish right from wrong. When I read the Gospel, I see these qualities perfectly fulfilled in Jesus. When Jesus saw the hungry crowd and was moved with compassion, we see a heart that suffers with others. When he knelt before his disciples and washed their feet, we see humility and service. When he drove the merchants from the Temple and confronted hypocrisy, we see his refusal to accept evil. When he said, “Repay to Caesar what belongs to Caesar and to God what belongs to God,” we see wisdom and discernment. Perhaps these seeds of goodness that Mencius recognized in the human heart can also help us understand the traces of God’s image already planted within every human person.

Today the Church observes the World Day of Migrants and Refugees. Migrants and refugees leave their homes for many different reasons. Some flee from war. Some escape persecution. Others leave because of poverty, while many seek a better future for their children and families. Yet wherever they come from, whatever language they speak, and whatever the color of their skin may be, each person bears the same image of God. In a very real sense, our own parish is also a community of migrants. Many of our parishioners left Korea and began a new life here in Dallas. At first the language may have been unfamiliar, the culture different, and life uncertain. Many struggled to find work, raise children, and build a new community. I, too, left Korea and now serve as a priest in this country. Because of that experience, perhaps we understand something of the heart of a migrant. We know how precious one kind word can be in a foreign land, and how much strength can come from a hand extended in friendship.

Today’s Gospel tells us about two sons. Their father asked both of them to work in his vineyard. The first son initially refused, but later changed his mind and went. The second son politely said, “Yes, sir,” but never went. Jesus asks which of them actually did the father’s will. The answer is clear: the one who acted. This Gospel challenges us today. It is not enough for us to say, “Every person is created in the image of God.” We must live according to what we profess. It is not enough to say that we care about migrants and refugees. We must be willing to welcome the stranger, listen to the lonely, help those who are struggling, and recognize Christ in those who may seem different from us. Faith becomes real when what we believe is expressed through what we do.

Saint Paul gives us the spirit with which we should live this calling. He tells us not to act out of selfishness or vainglory, but rather to regard others with humility and to look not only to our own interests but also to the interests of others. Then he gives us these beautiful words: “Have in you the same attitude that is also in Christ Jesus.” On this World Day of Migrants and Refugees, let us remember that the stranger also bears the image of God. The migrant bears the image of God. The refugee bears the image of God. And whenever we welcome them, respect them, and walk with them, the image of God within us also becomes more visible. May we not merely speak about love and human dignity, but live them, so that our lives may truly reflect the heart of Christ. “Have in you the same attitude that is also in Christ Jesus.”
