Homily

27th Sunday in Ordinary Time

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ, When we look at history, we see that there has never been a power that remained strong forever. Just as the seasons change, empires rise and eventually disappear. In China, many dynasties came and went after the unification under the Qin Dynasty. Korea also passed through the Three Kingdoms period, Goryeo, and Joseon before becoming the Republic of Korea today. World history tells the same story. There were the empires of Egypt, Babylon, Persia, and Rome, followed by the Islamic empires and the British Empire. Today, the United States is one of the world’s great powers, but no one knows how history will unfold in the future. One thing is certain: no power lasts forever. Stagnant water eventually becomes foul, and a bicycle will fall if we stop pedaling. Individuals, nations, and communities must continually examine themselves and be renewed.

The semiconductor industry, which plays such an important role in the twenty-first century, gives us another example. The semiconductor industry began in the United States, and for a time Japan led the world with its advanced technology and manufacturing strength. Later, South Korea emerged as a major competitor through bold investment and technological development. Today, in the age of artificial intelligence, Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix have become globally competitive in memory chips and HBM technology. But even this position will not last forever. New technologies will emerge, and new companies and nations will rise to challenge the present leaders. What matters, therefore, is not simply how strong we are today, but whether we are willing to keep learning, changing, and renewing ourselves. Whatever is alive grows and changes. When something refuses to change, sooner or later it begins to decline.

The world of religion, which seeks to guide the human soul and inner life, must also continually examine itself. Each of the world’s great religious traditions has beautiful qualities. Islam has a strong tradition of prayer and surrender to God. The practice of setting aside specific times during the day for prayer and remembering God can also teach us something valuable. Buddhism has a strong tradition of spiritual discipline and compassion, encouraging people to examine their desires and attachments, discipline their hearts, and respect all living beings. Then what is one of the most beautiful characteristics of Christianity? I would say it is love and sacrifice. Jesus told us to love our enemies. He told us to forgive not merely seven times, but seventy-seven times. He taught us, through the parable of the Good Samaritan, to become neighbors to those who are wounded. And finally, on the Cross, He gave even His own life for us. Therefore, we should ask ourselves: How well are we living out Christianity’s greatest gifts love and sacrifice in our daily lives?

There is an old saying in the Church: “Ecclesia semper reformanda” “The Church must always be renewed.” Renewal does not mean simply following the trends of the world. Nor does it mean changing the Gospel to fit the spirit of the age. In fact, it means the opposite. It means continually returning to Jesus Christ and returning to the heart of the Gospel. The Church is not holy simply because it is old. A parish does not automatically become a good community because its church building is large or because many people attend. If we pray but refuse to forgive, if we attend Mass but remain indifferent to the poor, or if we know Catholic teaching well but continue to judge and hate our neighbors, then we have moved away from the heart of the Gospel. The Church is renewed whenever I try to understand one person more deeply, forgive one more time, share a little more generously, and love a little more faithfully.

Both today’s first reading and the Gospel speak about a vineyard. The prophet Isaiah tells us that God prepared good soil, cleared away the stones, and planted the finest vines. Yet instead of producing good grapes, the vineyard produced wild grapes. In the Gospel, Jesus tells us about a landowner who entrusted his vineyard to tenants. When harvest time came, the owner sent his servants to collect his share of the produce. But the tenants beat and killed the servants, and finally they even killed the owner’s son. There is something very important for us to remember here: God is the owner of the vineyard. We are not the owners; we are the tenants. Our lives, our families, our parish, and even the Church itself are vineyards that God has entrusted to us for a time.

History has no permanent superpower. Companies, nations, and institutions all change. But there is one thing that never changes: God’s love for us. And the Church that believes in that love must always be renewed. This renewal does not begin with something dramatic. It begins when I pray a little more today, forgive someone I have resented, reach out to a neighbor who is struggling, try to understand rather than judge, and choose to give rather than simply receive. The Lord continues to entrust His vineyard to us today. When He comes again, may we be able to return to Him a vineyard rich with the fruits of love, mercy, justice, and peace. As the Lord says: “I chose you from the world, to go and bear fruit that will remain.”
