Homily

28th Sunday in Ordinary Time
(Military Sunday)

My dear brothers and sisters,
A senior priest I know founded a community called “A Village on the Hill.” Together with parents who were looking for an alternative way of educating their children, he formed a community where people tried to live like the Christians of the early Church, sharing what they had with one another. The priest prayed with the community, sang hymns with them, and worked the land alongside them. He later wrote books about the experiences and stories that grew out of that community.

I have always hoped to visit that place someday, although I have not yet had the opportunity. Still, through his books, I have been able to glimpse something of his spirituality and way of life. Just as migratory birds fly south when winter comes, priests who were tired and worn down would come to this village. There they prayed together, sang together, worked together, and gradually recovered strength in their hearts.

I am grateful to this priest, who has faithfully cared for this “Village on the Hill” for more than twenty years. The Church certainly needs structures and rules. We need communities and buildings as well. But at a deeper level, the true Church must become a “village on the hill” that shows people hope. It should be a place where someone lost in the darkness can see a light from far away and find the way home. It should be a place where the weary can come and rest, and where those who have fallen can find the strength to rise again.

I once read a story about a remote mountain village. A raging river flowed in front of the village, and a high mountain stood behind it. When someone became seriously ill, there was no way to reach a hospital because there was no road. One day, an old man picked up a pickaxe and a shovel and began digging a tunnel into the mountain. People said to him, “Do you really think this is possible?” Some even laughed at him. But the old man never gave up. He dug day after day. After he died, his son continued the work. Then his grandson took his place. After sixty years, a road finally passed through the mountain. From then on, when someone became sick, the villagers could reach the hospital in the city. No one had to die simply because there was no road.

Whenever I think of this story, one thought comes to mind: time without action simply passes by, but time filled with hope and action becomes history—and sometimes even becomes a legend. That old man created a path with his own life. A person like that becomes a “village on the hill” for others. Today’s Scripture readings speak to us about hope. The prophet Isaiah says: “He will destroy death forever. The Lord God will wipe away the tears from every face. On that day it will be said: ‘Behold our God, to whom we looked to save us!’” Even while the people of Israel were living in exile and longing for their homeland, Isaiah proclaimed the hope that God had not forgotten them.

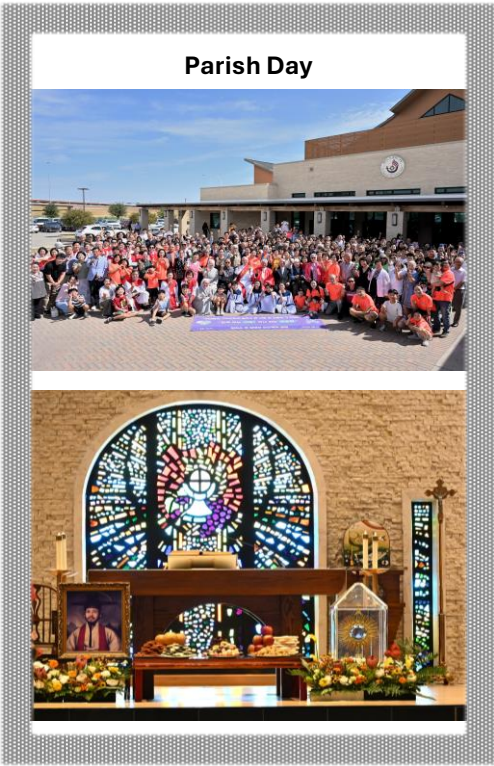

Saint Paul also says: “My God will fully supply whatever you need, in accord with his glorious riches in Christ Jesus.” And he tells us: “I know how to live in humble circumstances; I know also how to live with abundance. In every circumstance and in all things I have learned the secret of being well fed and of going hungry, of living in abundance and of being in need.” The courage of Saint Paul came from his faith in the Lord. His faith was not simply something he believed in his heart. It became action. Wherever Paul went, Christian communities were born, and those communities became churches. The early Church was able to endure persecution and hardship because there were apostles who had courage and apostles who acted. Saint Paul himself became a “village on the hill.”

In today’s Gospel, Jesus speaks about the wedding garment. This garment is not something expensive or luxurious. The garment the Lord desires is something very different. When we wear the garment of gratitude, when we wear the garment of generosity, when we wear the garment of patience, and when we wear the garment of forgiveness, we begin to experience true freedom. We begin to discover the happiness that God gives us. Let us therefore put on the garment of gratitude, the garment of patience, the garment of sharing, and the garment of love. In God, who gives us strength, we can endure every circumstance and continue to move forward.

A person of faith does not spend life counting the dust on the road and complaining about it. A person of faith looks for the light that shines in the darkness and walks toward it. May our lives become “a village on the hill.” May our parish become a place of light, a place of rest, and a place of hope for those who are tired, wounded, or searching for their way. And let us pray with the words of today’s Psalm “The Lord is my shepherd I shall not want. In verdant pastures he gives me repose beside restful waters he leads me”
